How does RingGo work?

To download the RingGo app, go to your phone's App Store or Google Play Store and search for RingGo. Once you've downloaded the app, set up your account by registering a few details and when you want to park, you can pay in seconds.

Once you're parked in an area where RingGo is offered, you need to confirm the vehicle you're using and let the service know exactly where you are parked. You do this by entering the four or five digit location number, advertised on local signs.

For example, if a RingGo sign displays “1234”, this would be the location code you would enter on your mobile. You then just have to say how long you're staying and confirm your payment details.

Another benefit of phone parking is that if your parking is running out, you can extend your time wherever you are by using the RingGo app. Just select your current session from the sessions tab and the app will ask you how long you want to extend for. Choose a time, confirm, and you're good to go.

With RingGo, you'll never need a ticket from the machine again. Parking enforcement officers know you're parked with the service by checking the vehicle registration on their devices, so there's no need to trek to and from, or queue at, the parking machine either.
