Police operation resulted in 150 arrests

Operation Loki, Devon & Cornwall Police's neighbourhood policing operation, resulted in over 150 arrests and over 100 drug seizures.

Amongst the arrests were various offences including anti-social behaviour, drug offences, being drunk and disorderly and assault.

The drugs seized had a street value of over £6,000. The seizures included cocaine, crack cocaine, and heroin.

First launched on 20 March, Op Loki was the Force's response to dealing with ASB, targeting key areas including Torquay, Exeter, Barnstaple, Plymouth, Truro and Falmouth. After success in Torquay, the operation was also expanded to Paignton.

Whilst the operation had a focus on anti-social behaviour and other activities that make communities feel unsafe, officers tailored their policing tactics to each area's unique issues. This included high-visibility patrols, traffic operations and operations targeting drugs supply.

PC Currie and PC Pickin conducted foot patrol around Priory Park and through Bodmin Town Centre.

They discussed any issues or concerns with local residents and shopkeepers, while taking advantage of the nice weather

A day in the life of a CID investigator.

Today my shift started at 07.00hrs and I checked my emails from my rest days and dealt with issues and queries from those.

These included an email from a Social Worker regarding a young rape victim and an email from a colleague asking if I could email the college and give them an update on bail conditions from a case which involved the suspect being in custody and being interviewed last night.

The bail conditions had to be passed to the college so they could facilitate the victim and suspect being able to study apart.

At 08.00hrs the Detective Sergeants hold a daily morning meeting to discuss the crimes to be investigated and the currently suspects in custody that need interviewing.

I may be tasked to go to custody to interview a suspect for offences which could range from GBH maybe stabbings or punches, or Rape and other sexual offences to burglary or fraud.

I will research the crime and evidence gathered so far and prepare an interview plan. I will prepare disclosure and pass this to the solicitor dealing with that suspect and check whether the suspect is going to need an appropriate adult or an interpreter.

If there is a custody case to deal with then this will invariably take all my shift. Afterwards there will be liaison with my supervisor, bail conditions to consider, safeguarding and signposting afterwards and importantly the victim to update.

Should I be the investigating officer moving forward with this crime then I would need to spend some time on an investigation plan.

This may involve looking at the following:

Is there cctv? Are there forensic opportunities? Is there still a scene of the crime that could be processed by our CSI's? What digital evidence is available? Witnesses need to be seen and spoken to, House to house conducted. Is medical evidence appropriate?

Should a press release be considered? Should our Neighbourhood policing colleagues be consulted? This is not an exhaustive list and there could be other considerations depending on the case involved.

It is very difficult explain to victims that we carry a very large number of cases and that we are only human and can't physically do everything we want to do as quickly as we would like. Often cases take months and months and sometimes years to investigate and conclude through the criminal justice process. This is a very hard part of our job and prioritising work that is already urgent is very stressful and draining.

However, on this day there are no custody cases and no dynamic incidents from the day before which need dealing with e.g., witness statements taking - so I am free to work on my workload.

I am though booked on the radio channel and a sudden unexpected death comes in which CID will attend if certain criteria apply.

Sadly this is a suspected suicide case and so I do attend and speak with relatives at the scene. For unexpected deaths CSI's normally also attend and give us their expertise of the scene. There are often shocked and bereaved relatives or friends around which we will assist with.

A lot of our work touches upon people suffering mental health difficulties and we do offer referrals to support the public whenever we can as do a lot of partner agencies of course, but inevitably sometimes it is not enough, or something somewhere has failed for them, and the consequences are another grieving family.

In this case I along with my supervisor will check for suspicious circumstances and I will also act to collate reports and evidence of the coroner who ultimately will decide on a cause of death.

The rest of the day is spent organising a prison visit to interview a suspect for a burglary that has occurred in our area. There is also a burglary in Devon by this same suspect and two more on other forces which I will be asking him about. This suspect is alleged to have driven down from another part of the country and targeted a rural home whilst the owners were shopping, broken in through their patio doors and Continued on next page.

stolen all their gold jewellery. This investigation has taken 7 months so far which is relatively quickly compared to many of my other crimes. We need to interview him soon as he is due to leave prison in June and once out it may be hard to track him down.

The prison visit involves a lot of paperwork and organisation as they need to know a lot of information including knowing exactly what recording equipment you take in and why. The prison only allows a two-hour interview which probably isn't enough but will be enough to get a good idea of what the suspect will say.

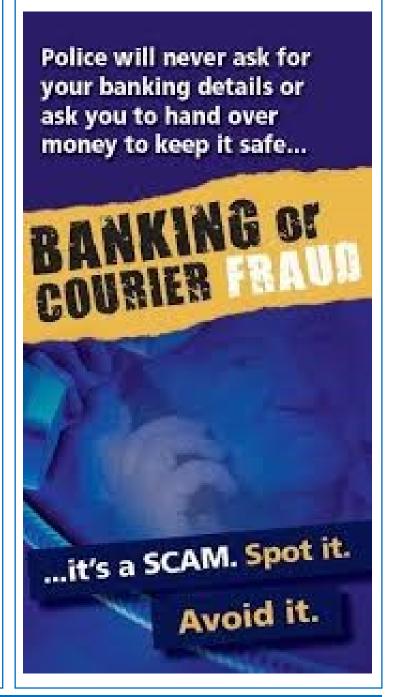

Once that interview is done, I can evaluate what enquiries are left to be completed prior top writing a summary up for CPS charging advice.

Well, that's the working day over all ready and it has been a relatively enjoyable shift.

targeted by fraudsters in online and phone scams. We received a report involving a 91 year old male who had been called by someone posing to be a Met Police Officer. They told the victim they were investigating their bank and that their money was at risk. They were told to take money out and await further calls. This took place over many calls and the victim was told they should not tell anyone and that the serious fraud squad would be in touch. Police would never make a call like this.

Incidents of livestock worrying increased in Devon and Cornwall throughout May according to Police.

Devon & Cornwall Police are reminding the public to keep dogs on leads when visiting Devon and Cornwall's open spaces this bank holiday.

Livestock worrying is when a dog attacks or chases livestock, it is a criminal offence and can have a devastating impact on livestock, farmers and in some circumstances the dog and the owner.

Rural Affairs Officer for Devon & Cornwall Police, PC Chris Collins said: "We are hoping that by encouraging people to respect our countryside and communities this bank holiday we can also ensure responsible dog ownership and remind people of the law."

"All land is owned, and access is not a given right, so it is important that users of the countryside understand specific designations of land and 'rights of way'. For example, on land which is designated as 'access land' a dog must be on a lead between the 1 March and 31 July and at all times when livestock are present."

"Allowing dogs to chase or attack livestock is a criminal offence. Take notice of local signage, respect wildlife and any livestock around you, keeping your dog on a lead to protect livestock and ground nesting birds".

"If you witness an attack on livestock, do not intervene, keep yourself safe and call 999. All other information relating to attacks on livestock should be reported to the police online or by calling 101".

Officers from the Alliance Roads Policing Team at Devon & Cornwall Police carrying out Operation Vortex, targeting drivers of all types of vehicles who disregard road traffic laws on roads across Devon and Cornwall.

Operation Vortex aims to reduce the number of collisions and casualties, by targeting poor driving as a result of the 'Fatal Five' which consists of careless driving, drink/drug driving, failing to wear seatbelts, using mobile phones (and other in-car distractions) and speeding.

During week one of the operation, that started on Monday 15 May 2023, officers stopped a total of 98 vehicles.

Six drivers were arrested for drug driving as well as seven people for other offences including aggravated burglary, kidnapping and false imprisonment. A total of 15 drivers have been reported for using mobile phones and nine drivers for failing to have valid insurance. An additional 30 drivers have been caught speeding, five of whom have been reported to court and a number of vehicles have been seized as part of the operation.

A team of officers will be continuing to carry out patrols and observe driver behaviour in unmarked vehicles across Devon and Cornwall this week.

Motor Patrol Constable Richie Roome of the Alliance Roads Policing Team at Devon & Cornwall Police said:

"We're working hard to reduce the number of people killed and injured on the roads of Devon, Cornwall and the Isles of Scilly.

"It is well known that the 'Fatal Five' play a big part in the collisions we see across our force area. Our aim is to make sure that we keep everyone safe on our roads by making sure those who commit offences are caught and dealt with appropriately."

Op Vortex aims to not only deal with road offences, but to also educate the public of the potential life-changing repercussions of their actions.

Drivers who commit offences could receive a fine and points on their licence, a court appearance and even imprisonment for more serious offences.

Constable Richie Roome continued: "There have been a significant number of very serious collisions on Devon and Cornwall's roads recently and, sadly, many of these have resulted in a tragic loss of life.

"We would like to take this opportunity to remind drivers to be considerate of other road users, and to consider how losing their driving licence would affect them, their employment, their family and their livelihood.

"Law abiding road users have nothing to fear from this operation. Our sole focus is to deal with drivers who are putting other road users at risk and keep everyone on our roads safe."
